About this program

This degree is offered via Open Universities Australia. For further information, contact either of the following areas:

- Open Universities Australia \(OUA\)
- Griffith OUA Services

This program is designed to enable those without formal academic qualifications in Employment Relations to gain knowledge and skills in the area. Students may already be working in a job in the field or may be seeking to move into such a position. There is a significant practical Australian content to some courses within these programs.

In the Graduate Certificate in Employment Relations, you will develop a sound understanding of key issues around formulating and implementing employment relations policies in dynamic environments.

My attendance during the program

Attendance information

The Graduate Certificate in Employment Relations is a fully online program delivered through Open Universities Australia.

My career opportunities

My career opportunities

Graduates could find careers in industrial relations or human resource management across private, public and not-for-profit sectors.

The knowledge acquired will be relevant at the workplace level (for example, to those involved in enterprise bargaining and the management of staff), at peak body level (for example, those employed by employer associations and unions), and for those involved in policy formulation and implementation (for example, in state and commonwealth departments). You may be responsible for helping formulate policy and its implementation in the context of changing international, national and industry based employment practices. You may also find opportunities in advisory and consultant positions and also industrial officer and organiser positions in employer associations, employment relations consulting firms and unions.

Pathways to further study

Pathways to further study

The Graduate Certificate in Employment Relations also articulates into the Master of Employment Relations \(5614\) program. Students will be awarded 40 credit points (in lieu of core courses) toward the Masters program.
